Advanced Diploma in European Studies (ADES) 2005/2006

The European College of Parma Foundation

The European College of Parma Foundation is a higher education institution which provides academic training for young European graduates in the field of European Union law, economics and politics.

The educational programme offered by the College is a comprehensive, interdisciplinary academic curriculum covering the whole process of European integration.

The training provided is geared to preparing students for careers in EU, national and local institutions, professional associations, the corporate world and private practice.

One of the College's objectives is to develop professional skills in the management of EU policies devolved to regional and local government.

The Advanced Diploma in European Studies (ADES) has been welcomed by the EU institutions, which endorse its aim of promoting greater understanding of the European Union among young people. To that end, our academic staff include senior EU officials, university professors and experts in EU issues.

The first two academic years, 2003/04 and 2004/05 were respectively inaugurated by Romano Prodi, President of the European Commission, on 27 September 2003, and by Viscount Etienne Davignon, former Vice-President of the European Commission on 15 January 2005.

Promotion John Paul II

Course

The course takes one academic year and is divided into two full-time semesters from October to June, totalling 400 hours. Examinations take place in February and June. Attendance of lectures and participation in activities organised by the College are compulsory. Lectures are held in English, French and Italian. Students who have obtained the ADES diploma may also be awarded an In-depth Advanced Diploma in European Studies (I-ADES) by submitting a final dissertation on a European issue which they have drafted under the guidance of one of the College's professors.

Lectures

The Advanced Diploma in European Studies is divided into lectures, seminars and lectiones magistrales given by leading European and international personalities. In order to enrich the training with professional experience, seminars with practical exercises on current EU issues are provided. A seminar based on a European issue will be held in Latin starting from the academic year 2005/2006.

Lectiones Magistrales

During the 2004/2005 academic year, guest lecturers holding a lectio magistralis included Jacques Delors and Romano Prodi, former Presidents of the European Commission, Franco Frattini, Vice-President of the European Commission, Giuseppe Tesouro, former Chairman of the Italian Competition Authority, Giovanni Maria Flick, Judge of the Italian Constitutional Court, Sir John Mogg, Chairman of British Office for Gas and Electricity Markets, Claude Chêne, Director General of the Personnel and Administration DG of the European Commission, Reinhold Schumann, Professor at Boston University.

Language Courses

The month of October is entirely dedicated to intensive language courses (English, French and Italian) to enable students to cope with the various courses and to provide them with suitable language training in the fields of law, economics and political studies. The seminar in Latin will be preceded by a Latin language course. During the academic year, students may further improve their language skills by following extensive language courses.
