Prerequisites

In order to better keep up with the course pace, it is necessary to have studied the Introduction to Political Science and International Relations course and to have assimilated the tools from Political Science taught in that subject.

Students must be able to read and understand academic texts in English.

Objectives and Contextualisation

The Politics of East Asia course analyses East Asian political realities from an international, regional and national point of view. Any specialist in East Asian Studies should know the main political systems in the region-especially, its main two powers, China and Japan. Besides providing a general outlook of these political systems, the students will be familiarized with all the elements that form each system: actors (political parties, factions, actors, substates, civil society), institutions, and the Constitution. It will be analyzed from a dynamic and historically situated point of view, what is the nature of these actors, their relations and the nature of these processes. The main goal is to realize that no study of a society is complete if it neglects the political dimension.

Methodology

Throughout the term, the teacher will offer lectures on East Asian Politics. In addition to the contents explained during class, the teacher will offer a series of compulsory and additional readings, which will constitute the bulk of the course's materials. The students will also be compelled to use academic and scholarly sources, such as journals, books, specialized essays, and different reference tools and data repositories. Along with lecture classes, the teacher will propose practical activities such as watching documentaries and/or fiction films which the students will analyse and discuss in class. Resources will be made available at Campus Virtual in order to complement and update the course's contents, especially regarding current political issues at East Asia. Ongoing political developments will be discussed and debated in class.

Related matters

The above information on assessment, assessment activities and their weighting is merely a guide. The subject's lecturer will provide full information when teaching begins.

Review

When publishing final marks prior to recording them on students' transcripts, the lecturer will provide written notification of a date and time for reviewing assessment activities. Students must arrange reviews in agreement with the lecturer.

Missed/failed assessment activities

Students may retake assessment activities they have failed or compensate for any they have missed, provided that those they have actually performed account for a minimum of 66.6% (two thirds) of the subject's final mark and that they have a weighted average mark of at least 3.5. Under no circumstances may an assessment activity worth 100% of the final mark be retaken or compensated for.

The lecturer will inform students of the procedure involved, in writing, when publishing final marks prior to recording them on transcripts. The lecturer may set one assignment per failed or missed assessment activity or a single assignment to cover a number of such activities.

Classification as "not assessable"

In the event of the assessment activities a student has performed accounting for just 25% or less of the subject's final mark, their work will be classified as "not assessable" on their transcript.

Misconduct in assessment activities

Students who engage in misconduct (plagiarism, copying, personation, etc.) in an assessment activity will receive a mark of "0" for the activity in question. In the case of misconduct in more than one assessment activity, the students involved will be given a final mark of "0" for the subject.

Students may not retake assessment activities in which they are found to have engaged in misconduct. Plagiarism is considered to mean presenting all or part of an author's work, whether published in print or in digital format, as one's own, i.e. without citing it. Copying is considered to mean reproducing all or a substantial part of another student's work. In cases of copying in which it is impossible to determine which of two students has copied the work of the other, both will be penalised.
