Prerequisites

This subject requires a command of written and oral expression in Spanish equal to that obtained by a high school graduate. In order to pass the subject, students must demonstrate a correct level of oral and written expression in Spanish. Consequently, spelling mistakes and errors of wording will be penalised by a reduction from the mark awarded.

Obviously, all the practical activities must be original. Plagiarism refers to the process of students attempting to pass off another authors work as their own. The total or partial plagiarism is not allowed. Any kind of plagiarism will be penalised by failing the assessment activity, which will receive a mark of 0.

Objectives and Contextualisation

"Introduction to Spanish Literature I" is part of the 30 basic training credits of the first year of the Spanish Language and Literature Degree, which the student attends along with other Spanish language subjects and methodology of the study of Spanish Philology. Also, in this first course, students will obtain a further 30 credits of cross-disciplinary basic subjects: Latin, Introduction to linguistics, Comparative Literature, Main Themes of History and Main Themes of Philosophy.

Among the basic training objectives, students are required to acquire a solid and broad-based knowledge of the stages and periodization of Spanish literature, the development of the main genres and authors, through careful reading of selected literary texts. On the other hand, students will apply their acquired specific competences in the realization of speeches, both oral and written, related to the area of Spanish literature by using the methods, concepts and literary theories they have acquired.

The subject aims to offer an overview of Spanish literature from its origins to the seventeenth century. Special attention will be paid to the description and development of the main stages of literature and its literary and aesthetic currents, focusing on the reading and analysis of some of the fundamental texts of those stages, periods, movements and trends.

Assessment

In order to pass the subject, students must acquire a knowledge of the subject similar to that stated in the reference manuals. Therefore, it is essential that students complete all mandatory readings.

Their knowledge will be evaluated through two partial exams and a monographic paper.

The two exams will represent 70% of the final grade, given that each of the partial exams will be equivalent to 35% of the grade.

The monographic work will have a weight of 30% in the final grade.

The re-evaluation will consist of an examination of all the subject of the course. In order to qualify for the re-evaluation exam, students must meet two requirements:

1. Having submitted all the evaluable tests (the two exams and the paper).
2. Have obtained, at least, a 3.5 average of the three evaluable tests.

The grade of the re-evaluation exam will make average with the grade of the monographic work.

The monographic work will not have re-evaluation.

The review of the tests will be carried out during an interview with the teacher.

The student who has not performed or submitted any of the three required evaluable activities will be considered as Not Evaluable. The submission of any of the three activities implies the student's will to be evaluated in the subject.
