Content

Topic 1. Introduction to the History of Communication

Definition, methodology and objectives. Visibility and invisibility of the "feminine" concept in the history of communication. Prioritization of the "masculine" in the history of communication: the androcentric model of worldview.

Topic 2. Oral-gestural communication

Explanation of the communication in the illiterate societies. Grammatics of the totem and taboo, organization of communication in animist societies and first iconic manifestations. The body as a communicative support (work on the body permanently -tattoos, incisions- and temporal -maquillatge, dress, consensual gestures ...). Continuity of oral-gestural communication to the present.

Topic 3. Writing. Birth, development and debates around writing.

Precedents and attempts to classify the different writing systems: from the pictogram to the phonetization. Effects and impact of writing on social, economic and cultural organization. The importance of support and tools. The invention of the book. The credibility of the writing. Writing as art. Monasteries and copyists. Consequences of literacy. Writing and Aristotelian model of thought. Writing as an attribute of power. Women and writing: weaving and writing. Societies without writing.

Topic 4. Printing

The originality and differences of Gutenberg's invention and its mobile types. The expansion of the book from incunabula to the formation of large libraries. The periodization of the news: the announcements to the gazettes and newspapers. The new individual sociability: the court, the lounge and the coffee, the printing of texts and their social influence; propaganda systems, Luther and the religious and political propaganda and origins of journalism. Academia-club-party-periodical press: the Enlightenment and the conformation of the bourgeois public opinion space.

Topic 5. Communication to the industrial revolution

Industrial revolution: conceptual and material bases. Industry, economy and energy revolution. The role of transport, communication channels. Technical progress in the world of communication. The abolition of distance: the telegraph, the telephone, the postal services. Takeoff of the press: serious press and popular press. Creation of press agencies. Photography and precedents of the moving image.

Topic 7. Digital revolution and knowledge society

The communication industry and the so-called technology companies as a factor of development and crisis; victory of the audiovisual over print and book culture; omnipresence of communication and globalization of the information society; computerization and new technologies in leisure and work. Reflections on the new global village (reality and mythification of the metaphor): communicative immediacy (from Internet to reality shows), new technological illiteracy and digital divide: the explosion of access to information and production (from MP3 to DVD).

The content of this subject is sensitive to aspects related to the gender perspective.

Methodology

Learning will be based on several aspects:

- reading basic texts about the history of communication. One of the texts will be compulsory and evaluable in the exam. The work will be indicated in the classroom.
- Oral presentations in the classroom about the subjects studied.

Collaborative work and the capacity for critical analysis and reflection will be encouraged.

Gender perspective

The subject promotes gender sensitivity in a transversal way. It does it specifically in the following specific aspects:

- Knowledge about the inclusion of the gender perspective in all the processes of the design and application of the research, including methodologies and research techniques with a gender perspective or feminist.
- Reflection on the role of information and communication technologies in the transmission of gender stereotypes and in social transformation.
- Recognition of the digital divide and the adaptation of ICTs to gender differences: barriers and opportunities.
- Recognition of the contributions of scientists to the discipline.
- Recognition of the role of gender inequalities in science, both in scientific production and in their professional and academic aspects.
- Recognition of the values of gender equality in professional practice.

Assessment

The evaluation of the subject consists of three parts, the specific weight of which is:

- Practices: 50% on the grade
- Exam: 40% on the grade
- Participation in class and justified self-evaluation: 10% on the grade

To pass the subject, an average grade will be made between the 3 parts. It is necessary that the exam is approved with 5 points and that the score resulting from the average of the practices be a minimum of 5 points. All of them must have been done.

The last three weeks of the course will be devoted to revaluation. To go to the revaluation it will be necessary that the students have done the exam of the course in first call and that they have obtained a minimum score of 3 points. The revaluation will consist of the theoretical exam and a practical activity.

Course work or the exam that has more than 5 spelling mistakes and / or grammatical structure will be suspended.

All the details of the evaluation system will be specified on the first day of class and will be made public in the Moodle Classroom of the subject.

Practical evaluable activities:

The evaluable practical activities are distributed throughout the course and are related to key aspects of the subject and the syllabus of the subject.

There will be a practical evaluation every month at least, the theoretical test at the end of the course and the revaluation if necessary.
