Prerequisites

Having completed Module I

Objectives and Contextualisation

Through a gradual learning process that goes from the generic to the specific, this module pretends to introduce students in the diversity and complexity of the political, economic and business relations between the EU and China. Then, the contents of the module are divided in two parts: a first one that contextualizes the student with the political relations between EU and China, while the second focuses on the commercial legal relations between both actors.

The first part (formed by 3 different courses, although related to each other) provides the student with basic concepts and ideas from the field of International Relations (International System, actors, powers, etc.): these concepts are necessary not only to understand the insertion of China as well as the EU in the International System, but also to understand their mutual relations and their relations with other actors.

Afterwards, the student is introduced to the world of the EU with the aim of obtaining the basic concept and ideas to understand the institutional and political complexity of this sui generis international actor. The origins and evolution of the European project will be explained together with its main institutions, its functioning and its decision-making processes. From this point onwards, the student reaches the EU as an international power through the analysis of its external action. This approach lets the student to reach three goals: (1) analysis of EU-China relations through their security, economic and political agenda; (2) the cooperation and conflict areas between the EU and China at the time of establishing relations with different regions like Latin America, Central Asia and Southeast Asia; (3) the comparison of the positions and visions that EU, China and the United States hold regarding the functioning of the International System at different topics of the international agenda (sovereignty, human rights, climate change, etc.)

The second part of the module (commercial legal relations) provides the student basic concepts related to the Chinese and Spanish legal systems (constitution, civil code, legal personality, etc.); afterwards, the student enters into the mercantile sector of both countries (focusing on the role of the company) and make a small comparative study, providing practical elements for the future professional development of students in the trade sector between both countries.

Competences

- Apply distinct theoretical models to the analysis of complex discourse types (political, social, economic, business and cultural) from both an intercontinental and intercultural perspective.
- Carry out team work in interdisciplinary and multicultural environments.
- Compare and analyse the current political, institutional and legislative structures of the European Union and China, taking in their evolution and development in the 21st century.
- Continue the learning process, to a large extent autonomously.
- Make creative and original contributions in distinct fields, demonstrating an attitude of respect towards the opinions, values, behaviour and practices of others.
- Use acquired knowledge as a basis for originality in the application of ideas, often in a research context.

Learning Outcomes

Methodology

The dedication of students to this module is divided into several types of activities, each of them with a certain number of hours of workload. These diverse typologies of activities imply different work methodologies:

- Directed activities are activities completed in the classroom with the presence of the lecturer, basically formed by master classes, including practical exercises to analyze case studies, problems and examples regarding the contents of the module, oral presentation of assignments (being group or individual assignments) and individual exams

- Supervised activities are activities performed by the student out of the classroom according to a workplan designed and assessed by the lecturers. Here we will find the preparation of several group or individual assignments ordered by each of the 4 courses included in this module

- Autonomous activities are those activities that students perform on their own: these may include mandatory as well as recommended readings, the study of classnotes and any other activities that may complement the training achieved with the course. These activities represent most part of the time students devote to the whole module
