Methodology

The course methodology is participative. Teaching will be face-to-face. The students will have one week devoted to master classes and one week devoted to practices at the classroom. During the practices at the classrooms the students will apply theoretical knowledge acquired through the analysis of real industrial relations cases. Practices at the classroom will be done through group work and will be evaluated during the course. Students will also have to elaborate a dossier of practices in which practices elaborated in the classroom will be presented in written, at the end of the course. In the dossier, the practices will be completed with analysis and references to additional bibliography.

Fraudulent behavior: A student who cheats on an exam or try to cheat on an exam will be evaluated with a 0 in the subject and will lose the right to re-evaluation. A student who presents a practice in which there are signs of plagiarism or who cannot justify his/her arguments will be evaluated with a 0 and will receive a warning. In case this behavior is repeated, the student will fail the subject (0) and will lose the right to re-evaluation.

Annotation: Within the schedule set by the centre or degree programme, 15 minutes of one class will be reserved for students to evaluate their lecturers and their courses or modules through questionnaires.
