100.000 items in DDD

100.000 registres al Dipòsit Digital de Documents

The UAB institutional repository, DDD, has reached today the number of 100,000 records. DDD gathers the UAB digital output, scientific as well as institutional and academic. It is also the digital window shop for a part of the Libraries cultural heritage. The repository has experienced a constant growth from its launching in 2006, with only 3,000 records. In these last 7 years it has become a key tool for the dissemination of the UAB research and activity. The aim of the repository for a near future is to increase the automatic collection of material such as student guides and research works, and make easy the active involvement of users, by developing self-archiving forms that allow academic and research staff to archive their own works without external aid.

Self-archiving will be a tool to support the Open Access institutional policy of the Universitat Autònoma de Barcelona approved in April 2012. This policy reflects the commitment of the Universitat Autònoma de Barcelona towards the international movement in favour of the free dissemination of scientific knowledge.

The 100,000 are an important milestone for the promotion of open access to scientific publications and the dissemination of heritage collections in Catalonia.
