tries to play pool but scratches on the eight to play volleyball and always lands on his gut to woo an ugly rich girl and she marries a queer.

so here is my poem:
   joe you are a bore
   joe you eat shit
   joe you are a loser and i don't feel compassion joe when you move next week it will leave absolutely no ellipsis in my life joe the only good thing i can say about you is that you once introduced me to a girl with truly himalayan tits.

christmas at sunset beach: a sequel starved for seasonal pyrotechnics, the young assassins (who would have preferred to detonate a berkeley or a white house) have blown the oil refinery to kingdom will not come.

the sky hangs black above the chanukah bush.
a weather satellite caroms in its obscure orbit towards el bethlehem, where, in an aluminum kibbutz, a child is born with one eye.

nobody raises an eye from the ed sullivan show.
the mormon tabernacle choir is chanting god save the king. and i, i am getting it through my thick skull that jazz is dead with coltrane, religion with pope john, contemplation with the mahareshi, the corrida with arruza, america with malcolm x, and maternity with the mothers of invention. love died last week at a love-in, baseball with mickey mantle, poetry the early morning that i polished up my elegy for coltrane and the girl with braces that i didn't want to bang. my friends and i are clever as devils and write a lot of poems -- ornamental, bright, symmetrical as christmas trees -- but poetry is dead. we go through the paces now, hoping it is just a temporary imbalance of the endocrines and that a year from now we'll be embarrassed by these meanderings.

meanwhile, it should be a great year for nostalgia.
(who, for instance, wrote the lone ranger???)

Star Trek

She must in early adolescence have had bad skin because her face is slightly scarred.
Otherwise she is a flower, a bruised and unforgetting flower, apprehensive of being plucked, and scared to death of withering on the vine. Tonight she is no flower, she is a bird without a song, a bird whose song civilization has muted.

This afternoon she thought she was a courtesan at Akbar's palace, learned in the arts, esteemed alike by warriors and wives and poets. At any rate she'd like to be a whore of some degree but vestiges of pedigree have kept her a virgin. Tomorrow morning she will put on blinders and a college sweatshirt.

This once the prudes are right -- deflowering will be the death of her, anti-climax of twenty years of preliminary play, a sofa agony, Star Trek on the telly.

37

it is the third movement of my second piano concerto (the only one that i have yet begun) and in it acquiesces the fleugelhorns of the ghetto and a white boy in a sailboat doing no one harm. in development i take the keys to the kingdom, the key to the city, and the ring of the nibelung
