

(see us silhouetting
the wall and filling the window, making predictions)

we think with
the voices of crows
we are watching hopeless trees with hard yellow eyes

(we are making sunlight
we are melting the snow)

PORTRAIT NR. 31

the teaspoons are electrified today there is strychnine in the coffee the cakes have a tinge
of sudden death

the sofa springs are asymmetric and insanelly provided with land mines by each plate a piece of plastic marzipan entices already the doorbell smoulders suspiciously and the doormat coughs with static electricity in the wc bowl an alligator gargles the small glasses and the vitriol carafe are set out the invitations sent off lovingly signed with explosive pencil

soon our girlfriends will arrive

TO LOVE

Denmark's number one swinger -- that's me now, definitely.
13,800 streetlights in Copenhagen and Fredericksberg
are witness now of my eternal, undying patented love

to the woman whom I unblushingly call my young love
and kiss with the energy of a beetcrusher.

No one awards us a trophy for our endless evenings' odysseys with our marathon love.
And our intertwined fingers are as complicated as birds' nests.

We take terrific pains with everything.
It's a question of loving correctly.
Everyone seems to know how it's done.
We strive energetically to learn.

Saying goodbye takes three hours and morning comes riding a streetcar from Lower Fasan Way
and gathers me up into a merciful slumber after the test of strength.

NEW JERSEY THE PINE BARRENS

1. moss in the wet cedar i go into the woods
most every day with a bowbar cut down
dead branches i look 70 but i'm really 86
sometimes standing in the floating bed in the cranberries i think how the city's grown
close they think
in the bogs here we
all have pointy ears
pine snakes in the dark green mink deer
otter raccoon milk
snakes corn snakes
catfish rare tree
frogs that sound like a state trooper you
can't find them any where but here
