

and he says, "well, you don't succeed,"

and i feel myself starting to heat up,

and then something stops me,

and i think about it,

and i think about how hard i was on his half-brother, my first son, and i say, "you may be right.

i think it's because fathers, rightly or wrongly, feel more responsible for their sons becoming men than for their daughters becoming women.

they can do a lot of things with and for their daughters, and they can love them and take pride in them
and give them every encouragement, but they can't, especially by example, teach them how to become women.

so when we fathers see weaknesses in our sons

that are not our own,

we are intolerant of them,

and when we see our sons perpetuating
our own weaknesses,

then we could not feel sadder or more helpless,
and we blame these feelings on our sons.

i think you may be right;

i'm sorry if i was unfair."

i realize this is the first time i have ever admitted to him

that i was unfair

although i've never found it impossible to apologize to his sister, and i sit there watching my son begin to become a man.

SHE DIDN'T LIKE US MUCH EVEN BEFORE THE AYATOLLAH

i go to the office on friday afternoon to pick up the mail
and there in the campus paper is a report of kate millett's address on thursday afternoon.

i missed the presentation,
as did most of the male student body, because it conflicted with the world series.

but i see where kate says she's not concerned with overthrowing just any old government, she wants to overthrow all of them, especially anything that smacks of what she refers to as "patriarchal government."

she has a few words on pornography too. what a disgrace it is that for three-and-a-half dollars, (i suspect the prices have risen) a man can watch the humiliation of a woman on film.

when the subject of civil liberties is raised, kate says that she is of course opposed to censorship, but that women have about had their fill of pornography and that they'll put an end to it by economic pressures.

she also says that women are fed up with being beaten and raped and robbed and exploited as they have been, by men, for centuries.

i'm hoping that my wife doesn't get wind of all kate has to say about us men or she may forbid me to borrow her car to drive to l.a. for my reading.

CLASS

"You got class all over you."

-- Count Mippiipopoulous

you know how things happen at the unlikeliest of times? well, i suppose that's why i was sitting in the bar on a tuesday evening with a comely young divorcee. i had forgotten that i had also told this married girl that i've been going out with that i might be in there, so here we are approaching the point of the conversation when the second girl comes walking in the door.

she came to the proverbial screeching halt and looked like she might be about to turn on the proverbial heel and depart but i saw her and went to her and said, "what are you drinking, the usual? join us at the table."
